PERSONALITY TRAITS

Gentle and careful with his words, Hendricks qualifies every claim he makes and treats foreknowledge as an obligation rather than an advantage.

RACE & CLASS PROFILE

A thin, slightly stooped man with wispy white hair, a well-kept beard, and pale blue eyes. His dark blue robes are visibly mended. He carries an ash staff and pockets full of small objects, each with a story.

EQUIPMENT

- Quarterstaff and component pouch
- Spellbook and scholar's pack
- Mended blue robes
- Leather notebook containing Ilse's last letters

BACKSTORY

Hendricks spent most of his life as a retired scholar chasing questions rather than answers, until the death of Ilse — a colleague whose last letters he still carries — left him with a question he couldn't research his way out of. He followed fourteen days of matching auguries to reach Driftmoor, treating the pattern as either providence or a problem worth solving properly. He behaves like a man still quietly in office: collecting observations, testing whether wisdom is possible once regret has become part of the method, and wondering — more than he lets on — why this particular town keeps appearing in his portents.
