Rowan Ashvale

PERSONALITY TRAITS

Unhurried and exacting, Rowan treats every crisis like a diagnosis to be made rather than a fight to be won — she asks about sleep and food before she asks about danger.

RACE & CLASS PROFILE

Weathered and quietly strong, with sun-browned skin, close-cropped brown hair threaded with early gray, and calm green eyes that catalogue a room's health at a glance. She wears a patched hide tunic dyed moss-green, a satchel of dried herbs at her hip, and carries a sickle worn smooth with use.

EQUIPMENT

- Leather armor and wooden shield (AC 15)
- Sickle and quarterstaff
- Herbalism kit and healer's kit
- Sprig of dried yarrow (spellcasting focus)

BACKSTORY

Rowan grew up the daughter of a village midwife in Ashvale, learning early that medicine is equal parts skill and mercy. When a plague swept through the village, she exhausted every remedy she knew and watched people die anyway — including some she'd promised to save. Afterward, an old herbalist at the wood's edge took her in and taught her that the forest holds cures no apothecary does, if you're patient enough to listen for them. Rowan left Ashvale with a druid's calling and an empty ceramic vial she still carries — the last cure that arrived a day too late. She wanders now wherever sickness or rumor of it leads her, still hunting the causes doctors miss, still unsure whether the forest's patience will ever fully answer for the village she couldn't save.
