Brenna Carrowmere

PERSONALITY TRAITS

Plain-spoken and steady, Brenna keeps people at arm's length with politeness and lets her actions do the vouching instead.

RACE & CLASS PROFILE

Tall and broad-shouldered, built by decades of drill and road work. Pale skin is weathered across the cheekbones; her hair, the color of wet straw, is cut short and practical. A long pale scar runs from left temple to jaw. She wears chain mail beneath a faded russet-and-green surcoat bearing the Carrowmere reed, and carries her greatsword with the ease of long habit.

BACKSTORY

Brenna trained from childhood as a Knight of the Order, learning that a sworn word binds harder than iron and costs more than blood. She served for years alongside Ser Halmond, a mentor she still measures herself against, until she lost him on a campaign she doesn't discuss. She came to Driftmoor to honor a contract whose sponsor died before she arrived, meaning to stay only a week — she's stayed considerably longer, evaluating the people around her with the same professional care and personal reluctance she brings to everything, unsure yet whether this is another waystation or the start of an oath she's postponed for eleven years.
