Tools: Smith's tools, one gaming set (dice). Vehicles (land).
Senses: Passive Perception 13.
Languages: Common, Halfling (her childhood nurse's tongue).

Class & Background Features

Fighting Style — Great Weapon Fighting: Reroll 1s and 2s on weapon damage dice with a two-handed weapon.
Second Wind: Bonus action; regain 1d10+3 HP, 1/short rest.
Action Surge: One additional action on your turn, 1/short rest.
Battle Master — Combat Superiority: 4 superiority dice (d8). Spend to fuel maneuvers. Save DC for maneuvers 13. Recover on short/long rest.
Maneuvers (3 known):

- Riposte — When a creature misses you with a melee attack, reaction: melee attack against it; on hit, add d8.
- Trip Attack — On a hit, expend d8 (+damage). Target must Str save vs DC 13 or be knocked prone.
- Menacing Attack — On a hit, expend d8 (+damage). Target Wis saves vs DC 13 or be frightened of you until end of your next turn.

Student of War: Proficient with smith's tools.
Knightly Regard (Knight): Three commoners are loyal to her family — a smith, a wheelwright, and a stable-girl in her home village. They will house, feed, and aid her if she asks, but will not fight.

Weapons

Greatsword (two-handed): +5 to hit, 2d6+3 slashing, reach 5 ft. (Great Weapon Fighting: reroll 1s and 2s.)
Longsword (carried as backup): +5 to hit, 1d8+3 / 1d10+3 versatile, slashing.
Handaxe (× 2): +5 to hit, 1d6+3 slashing, thrown 20/60.
Light crossbow: +3 to hit, 1d8+1 piercing, 80/320 ft.

Equipment

Armor: Chain mail, well-maintained.
Kit: Explorer's pack, smith's tools (small portable set), whetstone, oilcloth, a banner of her house (folded), seal of her knighthood (informal — her own).
On her person: 35 gp; a folded letter from her father, two months old, unopened (she opens these slowly); a small bronze badge of the Whitecairn falcon sewn into her surcoat lining over her heart; a tin of strong tea; flint and steel; a small whetstone she has owned since she was twelve.
Mount: A bay gelding named Ardent, twelve years old, slow but reliable. Currently stabled in Driftmoor.
Quirk item: A small carved wooden duck. Her father gave it to her when she was four. She does not know why she still has it. It rides in an interior pocket of her surcoat.

Personality

Trait: Polite to a fault, even with people who don't deserve it. Speaks rarely; when she does, the room listens.
Ideal: A given word is the only thing that is truly yours, because it costs you to give it. Everything else can be taken.
Bond: A bronze falcon badge from Ser Halmond, dead twelve years, sewn into her surcoat over her heart.
Flaw: Cannot accept comfort gracefully. Compliments, gratitude, and care make her stiff and remote. She knows. She doesn't know how to fix it.

Backstory

Only daughter of Lord Aubrey Carrowmere of the marshborders. Mother died when she was six; her father raised her as he would have raised a son, which is to say he raised her to hold a sword and keep her word. She squired for Ser Halmond of Whitecairn, a knight of the old code, from sixteen to nineteen. He died in a skirmish she could not prevent; she avenged him on the spot (the scar across her face is from that fight) and bore him home across her horse. She knighted herself at his graveside. The witnesses eventually accepted it.

She left her father's lands at twenty so that her continued presence would not force him to keep defending her. Eleven years on the road since — caravan guard, hired sword she didn't enjoy being, twice a bodyguard for people she came to dislike but did not betray. She keeps her word. It is the only thing she insists on about herself.

She came to Driftmoor on a contract that fell through — the lord who hired her died on the road — and stayed to pay her respects to the widow. She has been here nine days with nowhere to be next. This is unusual for her.
