Folk Hero — Rustic Hospitality: Common folk will hide him, share their food, and tend his wounds at modest risk to themselves.

Spellcasting

Wis-based. Spell save DC 13, spell attack +5. Cleric prepares spells daily: WIS mod + cleric level = 6 prepared, plus domain spells always prepared. Slots: 4 / 2 (1st / 2nd).

Cantrips (3 known): Sacred Flame, Guidance, Light. (Mending added — fourth cantrip is half-elf flexibility unused; using standard 3.)
Life Domain (always prepared): Bless, Cure Wounds, Lesser Restoration, Spiritual Weapon.

1st Level (prepared): Healing Word, Sanctuary, Shield of Faith, Detect Magic.
2nd Level (prepared): Aid, Calm Emotions.
(Plus domain spells. He prepares Calm Emotions ahead of any social situation likely to fray. He has used Sanctuary twice in his life to protect a frightened person from a frightening one. He has never used Spiritual Weapon. He has it anyway.)

Equipment

Weapons: Mace (+3, 1d6+1 bludgeoning), light crossbow (+2, 1d8 piercing, 80/320 ft). Mace at the hip; crossbow in the pack.
Armor: Chain mail (well-cared-for, faintly polished), shield bearing a simple sunburst over a hearth.
Focus: Wooden holy symbol on a leather cord. Carved by his father from a piece of apple wood.
Kit: Priest's pack, vestments (folded carefully), a small set of brewer's supplies, the lute (small, traveler's size).
On his person: 22 gp; his mother's leather prayer book (For my Tobe, who already knows); a small notebook of names he prays for (currently 84 names, oldest from 1992 of his ordination calendar); flint and steel; a tin containing three lumps of village honey-candy; a folded letter from his sister Marin, opened many times.
Quirk item: A small smooth river-stone from the brook behind his mother's house, in a pocket near his prayer book. He thumbs it when listening.

Personality

Trait: Asks twice as many questions as he makes statements. Remembers the answers years later.
Ideal: Hospitality is the form love takes when there is nothing else to offer. The door open, the bread broken, the chair set. That is most of his theology.
Bond: His mother's leather prayer book, inscribed For my Tobe, who already knows.
Flaw: Cannot say no. Will take on one more burden, one more story, one more night sitting up with someone who needs him, until his body fails. He has not learned to say "I am tired." He is not sure he ever will.

Backstory

Born in the village of Aldermere on the eastern marches — human mother (the village herbalist), elven father (a traveling musician who stayed thirty-seven years and then, with no quarrel and great affection, moved on). Tobin was raised in the village temple of the Bright Hearth, a domestic pastoral faith more concerned with good bread and honest neighbors than with war or theology. Novice at fourteen, ordained at twenty-three, village priest at thirty-one. He stayed twenty-five years.

He left Aldermere two years ago, with the blessing of his bishop and the village (they baked enough bread that he ate village bread for three weeks on the road). He left because he had grown too comfortable, too known, too loved — because everyone in Aldermere had stopped asking him hard questions long ago. He wanted to be useful somewhere harder.

In two years on the road he has buried twelve, married four, baptized nine, settled three property disputes, and counseled one suicide back from the edge. He keeps a notebook of names. He prays for them. He arrived in Driftmoor a week ago after rumors of strange things on the moors and a witch in old fey magic. He has no intention of confronting her. He thinks, however, that someone gentle and unafraid should be present in the area for a while, in case anyone has need of one.
